English Escaped Prisoner Writes of Cruelty of His Captors.

By PVT. T. B. DICKINSON. London, Eng., May 10.—A few min-ntes after our exptore within four miles of Helland (told in my last arconducted to a neighboring guardroom, where a quartet of patriarchal soldiers sat playing cards for pfennigs. I think, and smoking cigars which had never heard of Havana.

Our advent and introduction as British prisepers of war who had tried to escape from a German prison camp created quite a flutter. One uniformed and bearded "grandpa" expressed the opinion that we did not know when we were well off. "You men are safely out of the war," he said "and far removed from the dan-we had been given seats near the fire, and we needed them. The snowledge that I had failed to secupe took out of me what little strength I had left. There was a pot of coffee simmering by the side of the fire, and I asked If we could each have a cup, as we were both cold and exhausted. The request was instantly granted by the farmers, whose attitude was sym-matically, and they also gave us some black bread.
